From time to time, I receive mail with broad wine questions of interest to all readers. Tom Bowman writes: "I enjoy your column in the Epoch Times and was hoping that you could give my wife and I your recommendation. We are more inclined to favor white wines and usually the sweeter ones like muscat cannelli and moscato. Do you have any recommendations for us?" At one time, slightly sweet wines were the norm, rather than the exception, and quite popular throughout the United States...the category for medium-sweet whites and reds remains strong.

Drusian Prosecco Valdobbiadene Superiore Cartizze

The Cartizze cru is probably the most coveted patch of land in Valdobbiadene. The wines from Cartizze are the epitome of elegance and finesse in the prosecco world, and this nonvintage Drusian is a beautiful example. The mousse is fine and persistent, gentle on the palate but with exceptional length. Aromas of pear and citrus are refined, subtle and intertwined, a beautiful example of a Cartizze cru prosecco at its absolute finest. ($27)
